HomeSphere Announces Software Sale
Colorado Company to divest Builder 360 and BuildSoft

HomeSphere®, technology-leveraged service provider to the homebuilding industry, has sold its Builder 360 and BuildSoft back-office software product lines to Toronto-based Constellation HomeBuilder Systems Inc. (Constellation). Constellation intends to support and enhance both products for new and existing customers.

With the sale of these products, HomeSphere will concentrate its corporate resources on its growing menu of supply chain services to builders and building material product manufacturers.

Jim Waldrop, president and CEO of HomeSphere said, "The sale of our back-end software is another significant step by company management to target corporate resources on the rapid growth of our supply chain service offerings."

With a customer base of over 900 homebuilders HomeSphere will continue to build its suite of supply chain services, which includes its building material rebate tracking programs BRI® and AllTrack™ and recently introduced material takeoff services.

"HomeSphere's plan," said Waldrop, "is to build value by focusing our development expertise on next-generation supply chain services for builders, manufacturers and suppliers. To do so successfully, HomeSphere must concentrate its resources, in order to build our presence and products throughout the U.S. homebuilding industry."

HomeSphere's supply chain service suite (www.homesphere.com) consists of unique web-based tools -- designed specifically for the residential homebuilding industry -- serving both manufacturers and builders. The products' efficient, easy approach has helped underscore $300 million-plus worth of product sales, resulting in more than 100,000 homes processed year to date in 2006.

"HomeSphere," said Waldrop, "looks forward to continuing its role as technology partner to the homebuilding industry."
